Unlocking potential through their leadership training, mentorship and practical project programmes, SEBA (supporting education, business and achievement) nurtures well-rounded and capable leaders. From the growing prevalence of cyberbullying to the societal impact of school violence, students must navigate a landscape fraught with risks. SEBA is a first class youth mentoring organisation that addresses these concerns through innovative programmes that cultivate leadership, life skills and community engagement among adolescents and young adults. By combining a flexible, digital-first platform with a peer-to-peer mentoring approach, SEBA empowers students to build resilience, develop empathy and make informed decisions that prepare them to thrive in both their personal and professional lives.

From the start, SEBA has consistently emphasised a comprehensive approach to youth mentoring. The organisation's programmes have been specifically designed to address critical issues such as mental health awareness, responsible technology use and the importance of community engagement. Through its fully digitised platform, students can access leadership and life skills training anytime, anywhere, accommodating busy schedules while ensuring students remain connected to the programme without additional stresses. Their peer-to-peer model empowers students to guide and learn from one another, delivering a supportive environment and developing communication skills, empathy and leadership abilities through real-life practice and influence.

The judging panel were particularly impressed by the efforts made at SEBA to extend their leadership training beyond theoretical concepts. The experts equip students with practical tools and experiences that are directly applicable to their futures; from tackling mental health challenges to engaging with local businesses and community initiatives. By developing partnerships with organisations like the Arizona Technology Council, SEBA develops STEM leadership by preparing students to become skilled innovators who make meaningful contributions to their schools and communities. By partnering with local businesses, community enterprises and government initiatives, SEBA provides participants with hands-on experiences that develop and reinforce essential skills.

SEBA empowers youth through mentorship, leadership development, life skills training and innovative technology, developing resilience, community engagement and growth.
